Went to London in 1729 to study under Thomas Wright

Some years after he went to study in Italy. Whilst there he met Vernet, who at that time was located in Rome, who was so struck by a landscape by Wilson that he exchanged for it one of his best pictures. Raphael Mengs also painted his portrait there in exchange for one of his landscapes.

Returned to England in 1755

He was chosen a foundation Member at the institution of the Royal Academy in 1768, and was made Librarian of the Royal Academy in 1776, being a post of Honor.

Died in Llanberis, North Wales, May 1782

Bryant says: "In color, composition and aërial truth, few landscape painters have equalled and none excelled him. * * * His pictures only fall below the level of Claude Lorraine." This artist's works sell for very large prices and are held in great esteem by the greatest collectors.
